A Citrus Bowl tie with the Bulldogs of University of Georgia capped what had promised to be a shot at the national title. Under the direction of Bobby Bowden, FSU's explosive offense piled up hundreds of yards in every game and was rated one of the top offenses in the nation at the close of the season. With Eric Thomas at the helm, there seemed to be no stopping the running of Heismann trophy candidate Greg Allen and his running mate Roosevelt Snipes. Speedsters Hassan Jones and senior Jessie Hester proved to be a step too quick for many defensive backs. On the opposite side of the line an underrated FSU defense shut down many a successful offense, including the seemingly unstoppable passing attack of Bernie Kosar and the Miami Hurricanes. The Seminoles 7-3-2 record was a satisfying end to a season in which so much was up in the air until gametime. The FSU team was marked by outstanding play by not only the offensive and defensive squads, but also by the special teams. Special teams members Joe Wessels and Lenny Chavers worked together to block over nine punts during the regular season. With a successful '85 schedule behind them, the Seminoles look forward to the fall and another shot at being number one.

Lead by 6'11" Alton Lee Gipson, Florida State's Men's Basketball Team was off to a promising start on the road to a possible playoff berth. Joe William's high power offense was run by Senior guard Joe Farrar. Offensive standout forward Randy Allen helped Gipson control the inside, while sharp shooting Maurice Myrick and Dean Schaffner kept opponents guessing from the outside. Freshman forward Jerome Fichette came into his own while the FSU bench came on often and strong to spell the hardworking starters. The 1985 season was marked by a handful of single point losses that could have meant the difference between merely a successful season and a shot at the final four.
